of summer. She was a thin-faced, of summer. She was a faded woman of fifty, with sunken eyes had seen sorrow and suffering. Her dress was a tasteless affair of dirty brown and green, with red ribbons dragging at the side. "Are you the city clerk?" she asked in a pitiful tone that showed her un-familiarity with city ways. She was timid, hesitating and frightened.

"No, madam, I am not," I replied.

"Really I do not know. In his office,
